T the sight of the beautiful girl crying in the moonlight, the tide of the Italians variable emotion turned. He fell on his knees on the gravel path, uttering apologies in his broken English. Ah, Miss Lester, but you must pardon. I not mean to offend--we in Italy kiss the ladys hand. I do anything Vol. li. 22 Eve recovered herself, and conquered her rising anger. It was not alone the liberty Kinaldi had taken, that annoyed her. Her sympathies had been seized and held by David Rosss sad tale of his young life. She had meant to say more to him, when Mr. Marlowe and the Italian suddenly appeared. Never mind, she said severely; only remember--never again. And she went into the house. Rinaldi, rising from his knees and following, somewhat ruefully, found the Rectory drawing-room twinkling with lights and buzzing with the...
