If you have taken home and family life for subjects, add trade life now. No one liveth unto himself, should be the thought that runs through all, and doth all unite. The busy workman labors for his family; the blacksmith is a father also, who goes on Sunday to the church and sits among his boys. Shall not the child learn that in the outside world it is in acting well his part that all honor lies Lead him to discover and believe in the universal brotherhood of man. We cannot represent all trades; which ones shall we select Kindergartners say, choose typical ones, not trivial ones; choose those that show cause and effect, relation and 96 interdependence, cure being taken to select those best adapted to the needs of your own individual children, and those that can be best illustrated in your own room. Apply this thought of Froebels. Every subject presented to the child should contain an element of the old in the new and yet be complete in itself. Last month we went into the woods with the lumberman; the carpenter will naturally follow. Build houses, bridges, shops, and churches with blocks that you have for drawing and number work. They will prove excellent models for drawing and clay. Some boy will have a toy tool chest he will gladly loan; or the carpenter's son may coax his father to let him bring a truly saw and hammer. These are...
