Own Make The genuine juices contain a tolerably large proportion of starch, which, however, may easily be distinguished under the microscope from most of the starch added for purposes of sophistication. It will be seen that in the samples in which adulteration was detected by the microscope there was a large drop in the proportion of (silica and clay free) ash, which in the best, and presumably genuine samples ranges from about 3 to 5 per cent. In three adulterated cases out of four the ash fell below 2 per...
